

WOLF ROAD PAVING IS UNDER WAY

Long Battled For Connection With Lincoln Way Reality

At last the Wolf Road connection with the Lincoln Highway south of Mokena is a reality. The first concrete on the south end of the Wolf Road connecting with the Lincoln Highway was poured last Saturday by the Thompson-Powers Construction Company. About 300 feet of pavement was laid the first day and the construction firm expects to have the paving of Wolf Road up to the end of the present paving at the Hickory Creek Bridge completed by next Monday.

The new roadway runs thru some very pretty scenery and will make a beautiful scenic drive. The short stretch of highway through the Cleveland timberland is especially pretty. The old gravel road has been cut down from 8 to 10 feet in places so there are no steep grades as was formerly the case. The old gravel road running south by the Duncan farm and around the Cleveland farm to the new pavement will remain open. The gravel road which formerly ran around the Cleveland farm toward the Lincoln Highway will be shut off as part of this old road has been cut down about eight feet at this point.

After the completion of the Wolf Road paving work on repaving the Lincoln Highway or a stretch of approximately two miles will be begun. The hills in the Lincoln Highway have been cut down so there is now a good vision of approaching cars from either direction from the Wolf road intersection.

The Wolf Road connection with the Lincoln Highway marks the building of the last piece of highway on the Will County bond issue of $1,800,000 voted some years ago, for the construction of a system of hard roads in Will County. Due to a seven year right-of-way dispute which was finally ironed out last spring the paving of Wolf Road was held up until now. Mokena now has the much desired connection with a main trunk line, but this is not all. Wolf road must be continued south to connect up with route 45 better known as route 51 which will carry Wolf Road straight south to Kankakee and points beyond. Next Wolf Road must also be carried on north from 143rd street in Orland township across the canal and hook up with Wolf Road paving already laid north of the canal. These two extensions of Wolf Road will command the attention of the Wolf Road boosters from now on. When these extensions are completed Wolf Road will serve as the outer belt line of Chicago as envisioned by its boosters several years ago. When Wolf Road comes into its own it will be one of the most traveled highways in the state of Illinois as well as being one of the most important highways.

Base Ball Champs To Meet At Worth

Lefty Hanski, sensational pitcher who has won every game he hurled this year, and Wally Lysen, fleet-footed Illinois Wesleyan outfielder, will receive close scrutiny from several major league scouts this Sunday afternoon, September 13th, when the Worth baseball team, champions of the Southwest Suburban Baseball league, meet an All-Star team chosen from remaining players in the circuit at the Worth ball grounds, 111th street and Harlem avenue.

Lysen and Hanski, both rookies, are two good reasons why the Worth team won seventeen games and lost but one in the strong Southwest league.

A group of twenty-four players has been chosen from teams of Palos Park, Oak Lawn, Evergreen Park, Tinley Park, Oak Forest, Midlothian and Blue Island. From this list of stars, Manager Harry Nicholson will pick a line-up that should be as strong as any team in the district.

Another feature of the All-Star game will be a ball throwing contest between Big Norm Teason of Worth and Sammy Shields of Evergreen Park. Both have powerful arms and the contest will settle a moot question among southwest ball players.

Plainfield Defeats Mokena Orioles

By Max Williams

The Mokena Orioles were defeated on their own diamond by Plainfield in a very closely contested game. George Lauffer was the first hurler for Mokena giving way to W. Cappel in the fourth inning. Hayes was the full game pitcher for Plainfield. Plainfield was winning by a score of 9 to 5 in the seventh inning when George Lauffer smacked a homer with the bases loaded to tie the score. Plainfield retaliated in the eighth to run the score up to 12-9. In the last of the ninth W. Cappel hammered another homer with one man on thus bringing the score up to 12-11. Homerding pinch-hit for E. Lauffer and grounded out thus ending the game. The Orioles play a return game at Plainfield at the end of this month. Date of game will be posted later.

ORLAND LABOR DAY PICNIC DRAWS 2,000

Approximately 2000 persons attended the Labor Day parade and picnic sponsored by the Orland Park Labor Day Picnic association. The celebration was along new lines and as the association was backed by the Orland Park M. E. church no beer or liquors nor slot machines were allowed in the picnic grove.

The parade was held at 1:30 p. m., and consisted entirely of comic features which met with a hearty response from the public. The entire parade was one grand scream from beginning to end.

The Orland Park Fire Department impersonation carried off first prize. The take-off was very clever. Some one would run ahead of the "truck" and light a piece of paper on the pavement and the "firemen" responded quickly with a squirt gun and put out the blaze instantly. Those taking part as firemen were Floyd Cooper, Stanley Cooper, Roy Glahn, Harold Kay and Warren Townsend.

Another feature of the parade which created gales of merriment were the "Dionne Quints" impersonated by five heavyweight women whose combined weight caused the truck they were riding in to sag. Those taking the part of the quintes were Mrs. Hilda Cox, Mrs. Lester Kay, Mrs. Gladys Kesser, Mrs. Walter Kay and Mrs. Laura Heald. Thomas Cooper took the part of Dr. DeFoe and wore a plug hat and took particular pains to see that his five "little" charges were well taken care of. This take-off captured second prize.

The "Belles of the Gay 90's" who wanted a man also created much fun. Those taking part were Lucille Copper, Eleanor Cox, Mildred Uthe, May and Lucille Heish, Ruth Arnold. They were awarded third prize.

Other prize winners were: Funniest couple, Eleanor Knox and Mildred Doctor.

Bicycles, Virginia Gee and Eleanor Cooper.

Prettiest Doll Buggy; 1st Shirley Cleveland and Dorothy Arnold 2nd. Best Clown, Bob Miller.

The New Lenox school band under the direction of Robert Wight furnished the music for the parade which started from the forest preserve on 143rd street and marched to the Southwest highway to the Gee Grove along the Orland Lake. Here all kinds of games and a band concert at 3 o'clock kept things lively. A boat race on Orland Lake was an interesting feature of the celebration. In this event Martin Steinhagen was awarded first prize and Bill Heiting second.

There was such a tremendous demand for eats and refreshments that the commissary had a hard time to fill the demand and finally did run out of supplies.

The big feature which climaxed the day's activities was the amateur show in which amateurs from all the surrounding communities took part. The prize winners were:

Elsie May Sneyden of Oak Forest, age 7, won first prize with her acrobatic feats.

Kohl and Kohl a musical and singing team of Mokena carried off second honors.

Mildred Ordman of Lemont won third prize for impersonation of radio and screen stars.

As this celebration went over so big it has been decided to make this affair an annual one.

SYNOPSIS

Sleepy Cat, desert town of the Southwest, is celebrating the Fourth of July. Jane Van Tambel, beautiful daughter of Gus Van Tambel, hated owner of Gunlock ranch, has arrived from the East for the first time. She watches the Frontier Day celebration in company with Dr. Carpy, crusty, tender-hearted friend of the community. Henry Sawdy of the Circle Dot ranch, tricked in a fake horse race the day before by Dave McCrossen, foreman at Gunlock, plans revenge. He enters Bill Denison, a handsome young Texas wrangler, in the rodeo which McCrossen is favored to win, and lays heavy bets on him. Unknown to the crowd, Denison is a champion horseman, McCrossen and the young stranger tie in the various events. McCrossen picks up a handkerchief from the ground riding full speed, facing backward. Denison easily follows suit. Denison then drops a cigarette carelessly. Racing down the track full tilt, he picks up the cigarette. The verdict goes to Denison when McCrossen refuses to attempt the stunt. Entreated by the crowd, Denison agrees to perform another trick. Jane Van Tambel is asked for her bracelet and throws it on the track. Just as Denison rides to pick it up a yell from Barney Rebstock, a McCrossen henchman, scares the pony, nearly costing the rider his life. Gun play is prevented by the intervention of Dr. Carpy. The young stranger returns the bracelet to Jane. Back on Gunlock ranch after two years in Chicago, because of her father's illness, Jane gets lost riding in the hills and meets Denison, now a neighbor, who guides her home. Not knowing her identity, he speaks bitterly of Van Tambel. She tells McCrossen who brought her home and he denounces Denison as a cattle thief.

CHAPTER III—Continued

It nettled her foreman. "He's the worst enemy your father ever had in this whole country. He's probably stole more Gunlock cattle than all the rustlers in the hills."

"I don't believe it."

"All right, don't," exclaimed McCrossen, nettled. "Just ask any of the boys around the ranch."

Jane rode into Sleepy Cat next morning with Bull Page, and when she had dispatched her business at the bank, she walked up street to Carpy's hotel.

She asked for Doctor Carpy, whom she remembered from her visit two years before. The doctor had a private office, entered both from the hotel lobby and the street.

The doctor was somewhat surprised at the sight of this trim, erect girl, eighteen or nineteen years of age, and seemingly a stranger, facing him. Obviously she was a newcomer to Sleepy Cat; the doctor did not at once place her. But his glance swept everything about her like a flash—her cowboy hat, her red, open-neck blouse with its dark flowing tie; her sloping feminine shoulders; delicate, pleasing bosom and slender, rounded hips; her short brown riding skirt and her soft, tight-fitting tan boots. The rig seemed right for her brown hair and blue eyes. "Doctor Carpy?" her voice was clear and her manner possessed.

Carpy nodded. Despite his years, the sight of trim, girlish womanhood always stirred the blunt old surgeon to graciousness. The doctor doffed his hat and set his bag down on the desk with an air of satisfaction. "I'm Doctor Carpy. But I'm glad to see you don't need me or any other doctor."

"Why, Doctor?" exclaimed Jane demurely. There was a sophistication in the delicate droop of her eyelids, as she protested, that did not escape the doctor. It deceived him only as to her age. "That's hardly complimentary, Doctor Carpy," she ran on. "Have you forgotten Frontier day two years ago when we sat here on the porch together and in the rickety grandstand to see the riding?" Her eyes were laughing. Doctor Carpy was flustered.

"What is your name?"

"Not a very popular one in this country. I'm Jane Van Tambel."

He knit his brows. "Why, that's maybe two years ago, and it was a little girl that I talked to here on the porch and took to the races. I'll be hanged! Two years! And you've sprung into full bloom. Full bloom!" repeated Carpy in undisguised admiration. "Where've you been ever since?"

"In Chicago. You look exactly the same, Doctor."

"Can't say I feel exactly the same, Jane," he said. His eyes still rested on her. "How long were you out last time?"

"Only two months or so. But I'm out now to stay, perhaps."

"I heard something lately about some women folks over to Gunlock, but I didn't hear of you being over there. If I had, I'd have been over there myself. So you're Gus' daughter," he mused.

"I'm his only child, Doctor."

"Never knew he had a child till you came out the first time. You threw your bracelet out on the track, didn't you?"

"That was partly your fault, Doctor."

"Was it? Well, you got it back."

"I did, but I never learned the name of the man that picked it up. All I could find out, when I asked, was that he was a rustler. You don't remember him, do you?"

"Of course I do. Who the hell said he was a rustler?"

"Why, that's what they told me at the ranch after we got home."

"Well, you've got some able-bodied liars at Gunlock—one in particular."

"Who's that?"

"No need to specify."

"Well, what's the name of the wonderful rider who picked up the bracelet? And the cigarette?"

"It was Bill Denison."

Jane started imperceptibly.

"He's living here now on his brother's hill ranch—brother's dead. Well, Jane, what in the world brought you out here?"

"Why, because Father's so ill." Doctor Carpy nodded. "You took care of him, Doctor, and recommended his going to Medicine Bend—"

"It was pretty high for him here."

"—so he telegraphed for me to come out to look after the ranch—"

"Small girl for big job, as the Indians would say."

Jane laughed. "That's what Father said when he saw me. You know two years ago was the first time in his life he'd ever seen me."

"I never knew till then that your father had a family."

"Father was peculiar, you know. A little while after I was born he just disappeared. It was years before we even knew where he was. Then he began sending money back to Mother sometimes, but he never wrote a line. Then Mother died, and I went to live with my Aunt Lou."

"How old are you, Jane?"

"Almost nineteen."

"Well, well!" mused Doctor Carpy still regarding his caller benevolently. "So you're Van Tambel's daughter. I guess you take after your mother. The doctor spoke evenly, but the implication did not pass unnoticed."

"Aunt Lou says I do," she returned with composure. "So Father said, too, when I went to see him at the hospital in Medicine Bend last month. And he told me, Doctor, to come to see you about his bill. I couldn't find one from you among the bills at the ranch. Did you ever send one?"

"Hell, Jane, I never sent a bill to anybody in my life."

"Doctor!" exclaimed his caller, startled both at the expletive and the statement. "I never heard of a doctor who didn't send out bills!"

Carpy laughed uproariously. "Why, that's nothing."

"But," she went on, "you took care of Father quite a while. He thinks you're the best doctor he ever had."

The sardonic note in the doctor's slight laugh as he suppressed an exclamation did not escape the girl. "But everyone out here says that or something just like it, so you must be used to it," she added. "Please tell me now, Doctor, what the bill is; I want to pay you."

The doctor waved Jane off. When he sidestepped, she kept after him. He dodged, and she persisted. At last she drew from her purse two one-hundred-dollar bills and laid them on the table in front of him. Carpy looked at them in astonishment. "Your father hasn't gone out of his mind, has he?"

"No," Jane retorted. "Why? That's not enough, is it?" she added shamefacedly. "I didn't know."

"It's at least twice too much. Did Gus send this?"

Jane had to fib a bit. She had added a hundred dollars herself to what her father had told her would be about right, if Carpy refused to name the bill. "He told me he wanted you well paid," she answered evasively.

Carpy pushed one bill back to Jane. "That's plenty."

"Doctor," she exclaimed, "I wish you'd take this other bill."

He shook his head. "Put it back in your purse. How are things out at the ranch?"

"You know how it is when the cat's away," laughed Jane.

"You must mean the wildcat," suggested Carpy, grinning half amiably.

"Everyone doing things his own way," she continued, ignoring the thrust. "Or not doing them at all."

"Mostly that, I guess."

"Mostly that," agreed Jane. "I can see I have plenty of work ahead."

"And you going on nineteen. And, I'll bet, never did a day's work in your life."

She straightened up. "I've worked every day of my life since I left high school at fifteen."

"What for?"

"Helping support Mother."

Carpy flashed with anger. "Do you mean to tell me that old curmudgeon father of yours didn't support you and your mother?"

Jane's eyes fell. She crimsoned. Then, collecting herself, she said, "I did not mean to tell you, Doctor. It slipped out. We've nearly always had to look out for ourselves—but I hate to talk about it, Doctor. Father says he's sorry. When I telegraphed him about Mother's death, he was all broken up and sent me so much money for the expenses that I didn't know what to do with it—though it was too late to do poor Mother any good. I know Father's eccentric, Doctor," Jane continued gravely. "But that doesn't explain, to me, why everybody out here hates him. And that's what I've wanted to ask somebody like you, Doctor, somebody who would tell me the truth. Why is Father so disliked? Is it because he is so rich?"

Dr. Carpy was taken aback. Here was an innocent and charming girl budding into a lovely womanhood, the daughter of an unscrupulous criminal and thoroughly detested cattle king, asking him to tell her why her father was so hated along the Spanish Sinks.

"Well, Jane," he said at length slowly, "many a rich man is hated without good reason."

But if he thought he could get off with such a general observation he was mistaken. Jane pursued him. "Was that the case with Father?" she asked bluntly.

"Other rich men are hated," continued Carpy, unmoved, "not because they're rich, but because of the way they got rich!"

The force of his words was not lost on his listener.

"And if a man does get rich here or anywhere else, they don't lose any time hatching up lies about him, do they?" she said indignantly. "Father warned me when I saw him at the hospital that I'd hear stories about him. But there are always two sides to stories."

She spoke with a fire that surprised even her listener, who was seasoned to surprises. "There's a chip of the old block," he said to himself. He regretted he had insinuated so much. But while he tried to soften the impact of his words, he would not entirely retreat.

"I probably ought to say, Jane, that I myself didn't get on well with your father. So my verdict might not be a fair one. Another man might give a more favorable opinion."

"What other man, Doctor?" she asked so coolly that she upset the doctor again.

"Why, offhand, I couldn't say right now, Jane."

"Doctor," said Van Tambel's daughter, rising, suddenly; he thought her still angry, but she really wasn't—"may I come again, just to talk with you, perhaps get a little advice—come without excuse at all to see you—just plain come?" she asked, stiffly but impulsively.

"Why, of course you may, Jane. Why not? Come any time, all times—my latchstring's always out for you," declared Carpy, swayed by an admiration he could not resist.

"And you won't harbor any feelings against me just because you don't like my father?"

"How could I?" Doctor Carpy almost gasped with surprise at her poise. "Jane," he said, taking her hand, "just feel I'm your friend—I mean it. Sick or well, I'll be with you. I don't care a damn who your father is or was—is that plain, girl?"

"I'm awfully grateful, Doctor," she said collectedly. "If I get into a tight place, or into trouble, I'll know where I'll have a friend to turn to."

"Don't be afraid!" exclaimed Carpy emphatically. "You'll find you'll make plenty of friends out here just as soon as you get acquainted—don't be afraid!" he repeated.

Jane was at the door. She turned. "And Doctor," she said, with seeming innocence, "try to think of the name of the man who will give that more favorable opinion."

ly, "many a rich man is hated without good reason."

But if he thought he could get off with such a general observation he was mistaken. Jane pursued him. "Was that the case with Father?" she asked bluntly.

"Other rich men are hated," continued Carpy, unmoved, "not because they're rich, but because of the way they got rich!"

The force of his words was not lost on his listener.

"And if a man does get rich here or anywhere else, they don't lose any time hatching up lies about him, do they?" she said indignantly. "Father warned me when I saw him at the hospital that I'd hear stories about him. But there are always two sides to stories."

She spoke with a fire that surprised even her listener, who was seasoned to surprises. "There's a chip of the old block," he said to himself. He regretted he had insinuated so much. But while he tried to soften the impact of his words, he would not entirely retreat.

"I probably ought to say, Jane, that I myself didn't get on well with your father. So my verdict might not be a fair one. Another man might give a more favorable opinion."

"What other man, Doctor?" she asked so coolly that she upset the doctor again.

"Why, offhand, I couldn't say right now, Jane."

"Doctor," said Van Tambel's daughter, rising, suddenly; he thought her still angry, but she really wasn't—"may I come again, just to talk with you, perhaps get a little advice—come without excuse at all to see you—just plain come?" she asked, stiffly but impulsively.

"Why, of course you may, Jane. Why not? Come any time, all times—my latchstring's always out for you," declared Carpy, swayed by an admiration he could not resist.

"And you won't harbor any feelings against me just because you don't like my father?"

"How could I?" Doctor Carpy almost gasped with surprise at her poise. "Jane," he said, taking her hand, "just feel I'm your friend—I mean it. Sick or well, I'll be with you. I don't care a damn who your father is or was—is that plain, girl?"

"I'm awfully grateful, Doctor," she said collectedly. "If I get into a tight place, or into trouble, I'll know where I'll have a friend to turn to."

"Don't be afraid!" exclaimed Carpy emphatically. "You'll find you'll make plenty of friends out here just as soon as you get acquainted—don't be afraid!" he repeated.

Jane was at the door. She turned. "And Doctor," she said, with seeming innocence, "try to think of the name of the man who will give that more favorable opinion."

While Bull waited for his mistress during her talk with Carpy, he dropped into Jake Spotts' barber shop for a shave.

Spotts, who was bald as a billiard ball, expressed surprise when Bull gave him his order. "Whiskers off?" he exclaimed.

"Take 'em off," repeated Bull doggedly.

"Must be goin' to get married?"

"Well, not exactly," explained Bull. "We got wimmen folks out to Gunlock now, 'n' the boys are sprucin' up."

"What wimmen folks?"

"Ain't you heard? Got a girl there, daughter of old Gus."

"Is that damned old critter down at the Medicine Bend hospital yet?" demanded Spotts—but his expletives were much more ferocious.

A heavy bass voice was heard from the second chair, where Oscar was shaving a man. "Slow, Jake," protested the man in the chair, "go slow—don't get to cussin' out old Van Tambel."

"All right, Panama; all right," returned Spotts, resignedly, "I plum forgot you were there."

"That man," gravely continued the man addressed as "Panama" and referring to Van Tambel, "will keep more Sleepy Cat folks out of heaven than the devil himself."

"How's that?" asked Spotts.

"Why? Because everybody cusses him so terrible whenever his name comes up."

"I guess that's right," agreed Spotts. "Anyway, there's more damned blasphemers goin' on in this town—"

"Careful, Jake; careful," admonished Panama.

"All right, Panama," grumbled the notoriously profane barber. Then, under his breath, so Panama could not hear, "It's got so a man can't say a damned word any more. What's the girl like, Bull?" he asked.

"Well," responded the Gunlock hearty, "she's comin' around eighteen or twenty; lively as a cricket and straight as a ramrod."

"Is she anythin' like old Van Tambel?"

"Not a bit. She's as nice and tidy a miss as you'd want to set eyes on."

"Then there's one grand big mistake somewheres," declared Spotts, definitively. "That damned old critter couldn't be the father of a girl like that."

"Tut, tut, Jake," interposed Panama, rising solemnly from the chair and reaching for his collar and tie. "You promised to give up swearing."

"Well, hell, I can't quit all at once, can I?" demanded Spotts testily. "Ain't I doin' better every day?"

"Got to watch you, though, I guess," observed Panama shrewdly.

Bull caught sight of the man out of the corner of his eye. He was almost gigantic in proportions. Tall, stout, erect, with leonine features, shaggy brows and a heavy mop of coarse, straight, black hair, worn long and cut flatly across the back of his neck."

ILLINOIS BLUE BOOK WORK OF REAL ART

The Illinois State Blue Book for 1935-1936, a biennial production which synthesizes reports of the various State departments and carries statistics of interest to the general public, was announced ready for issuance today by its editor, Secretary of State Edward J. Hughes.

In order that it may be available to the many who are interested in the functions and performance of governmental agencies Secretary Hughes is having the book placed in all public and school libraries throughout the State.

The new edition is a book of more than a thousand pages and every effort has been made to provide a complete and clear picture of State activities.

The biographical sections deal with State officers, members of the General Assembly, and judges of the higher courts. A synopsis of bills passed by the regular and special sessions of the General Assembly provides a quick survey of the legislative activities. Agricultural, labor, industrial, and political statistics with general and specialized interest are included in the book.

There are more than 300 pages of articles on State Departments covering the Water, Natural History, and Geological Survey Divisions at Urbana, the University of Illinois, and the several State Normal Schools, interesting information about the newly inaugurated State police radio system which is now adding to the safety of the State's highways, an article on the Naval Militia, detailed reports of the Agricultural and Public Welfare Departments, and discussions of the departments of the Secretary of State, Auditor, and Treasurer.

A feature of the book is a 64-page section on the State Parks system. This includes a map which routes a tour over the entire system and the article, beautifully illustrated with views from the various parks and memorials, contains descriptive material and historical information which extends over the nearly 300 year period in Illinois since white men first entered the country.

The frontispiece of the book is a four color reproduction of the life portrait of Lincoln by George H. Story which now hangs in the Lincoln room of the Centennial building at Springfield. Lincoln posed for the basic sketches during his first term as President. The portrait never before has been reproduced in its natural colors. The original was acquired by the State in 1925.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Man" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, September 6.

The Golden Text was, "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace" (Psalms 37:37).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him" (Genesis 1:26, 27).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Man reflects infinite Truth, Life, and Love. The nature of man, thus understood, includes all that is implied by the terms 'image' and 'likeness' as used in the Scripture" (p. 94).

PRACTICAL PATRIOTISM

Wm. Martin Post 725

Patriotism is part of our own heritage. Our birthright was a great democratic nation, a nation replete with opportunity, with its government based upon principles of freedom and justice, which have been and will be always dear to our hearts. Most of us have fought or have been willing to fight, that these sacred principles might endure.

In passing on this heritage to succeeding generations, the democratic America we know, the America of Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln, faces a disruption, if not a complete destruction of many of the principles of government which we hold so sacred.

The position of America today is very much like a great estate which has been in the hands of one family for a great many decades; which has been a pride and joy to each succeeding generation; and a substantial source of revenue and opportunity.

The father on his deathbed, bequeaths this property to his son. "My boy," he says, "this estate was owned by your grandfather, your great grandfather, and his great-grandfather. Ours has been an honorable name. Many of your forebears have fought and died beneath the American flag. I want you to administer this property with the same principle of justice and humanity which have characterized this family for many generations. In the past this estate has been the source of great riches. In recent years the pot of gold has become a pot of ashes, and unfortunately this bequest to you carries with it a mortgage of many thousands of dollars."

Can we believe that the heir of this impoverished estate, will accept it with the same spirit as his more fortunate forefathers? Can we expect that the American youth of today, dwarfed in opportunity, unable to find employment commensurate with his education and abilities, possibly forced into a CCC camp, will accept his heritage of America and American institutions, with the same desire that we have to perpetuate traditions and the principles of democratic government?

America is teetering on the brink of disaster. Let us review what we have to work with and work against in our efforts to save our nation from a calamity.

Of the 75 million adults in the United States, 64 million failed to go thru high school and half that number never completed the eighth grade. This means that 85 of every 100 voters go to the polls to make a decision vital to their own welfare, and to the welfare of the nation without that portion of knowledge of civic problems which high school and college can provide.

It is true that during the past few years, greater general interest has been evinced in civic and governmental affairs, but it seems that the main sources of education and information, the press, the radio, the motion pictures and the theatre, have been tainted with misrepresentation and propaganda. Instead of presenting a fair and impartial display of facts on vital problems, they offer "public enlightenment" as construed by special interests and selfish minority groups.

More than 600 associations maintain headquarters in the Capitol. Many of these employ lobbyists to influence national legislation.

Now turn again to the youth of the nation. You can not hide from their young discerning eyes the fact that this is the most lawless and crime ridden country in the civilized world; that our system of jurisprudence is slow and ineffective; that greed is entrenched and monopolies dictate the price of many of our commodities; that Communism infests our disorganized strata of society; that fascist vigilantes and hooded secret societies vainly gloriously attempt to usurp the province of orderly government; that aliens in large numbers are on relief or are holding jobs that are denied American citizens; and that American markets are glutted with foreign products produced by competitive cheap labor, especially to the detriment of the American farmer who is the bulwark of our nation.

The youth of America sees not only these chaotic social and economic conditions. He sees also the tremendous burden of governmental debts to be transferred to his shoulders as an American heritage.

In the past Americans have been proud of American traditions and revelled in the exploits of American heroes. But today in many sections of our country the bright scarlet of our flag has faded to pink or Bolshevik red; the brilliant blue has been blackened by corruption and greed.

We can take heart in the knowledge that, through the great human effort of the American people, this nation has weathered other crises in the past. The question of interest now is: What are we of the present generation going to do about the present crisis?

The answer is in seeking the truth, and in analyzing the causes of our social and economic disintegration. Too many of us turn to a blind criticism of our predicament without searching for the underlying causes. If Communism is making headway, what are the fertile pastures which permit its growth? We cannot forcibly, or with oratory, stamp out Communism; our attack must be on the conditions which permit its development.

If we are on the threshold of dictatorship and disaster, as a prominent judge of Arizona recently declared, our attack must be on the causes which are leading us to the brink of this precipice.

We need more honest enlightenment on public affairs; we need more unprejudiced discussion of civic problems in our own communities; and we need more self analysis of our own individual patriotism. How many Americans are employing cheap alien labor to the exclusion of registered American voters? How many Americans are seeking special privilege and jobs for members of their own immediate families and dependents, rather than opportunity and a job for some individual in great need? How many Americans honestly can say that they place the valuation of American blood higher than the value of the American dollar?

The duty of the patriot is not in oratorical denunciations of un-American conditions, but in finding intelligent and effective means of combating the underlying causes of our degradations. Patriotism must be more than a flag waving sentiment, it must rise to an active principle of honorable and unselfish conduct and action.

Americans appear to be losing their abilities for constructive governmental engineering. Denouncing has become the by-word of the day. The Townsend Old Age Pension Plan is denounced far more volubly than the existing social security laws which we know are ineffective and inadequate. If you denounce the Townsend Plan what more practical or effective system for old age security and for keeping currency in motion have you to propose in its place? If you denounce the building of an adequate national defense in this era of international confusion, what practical means have you to propose for safeguarding America?

Our forefathers were builders. Many Americans today are assuming the role of destroyers. We seem to ignore such well defined objectives as steered the framers of our Constitution when they wrote the preamble:

"We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

Let Americans today bind to their hearts these same objectives and intelligently cooperate to indoctrinate them in the youth of America, and to establish them firmly as the fundamental principles of our patriotism and of the patriotism of the future.

Talking Fish at Expo

DALLAS, Tex.—Now it's the talking catfish.

Two of this type of catfish were received recently at the Texas Centennial Exposition Aquarium.

They won that cognomen because of the peculiar noises they make when they are taken from the water.

The fish were discovered in the Amazon river, and procured by the Aquarium from a New York importer.

Lion and Lamb Share Fair Cage

The lion and the lamb sleep together in peace in the Hollywood show of the Texas Centennial Exposition. The lion, it happens, is only three months old and that is the reason the lamb and little Doris Lou Bell are so carefree in its cage, just inside the Midway gate.

BACON—ALL DRESSED UP

HERE is a new way to broil bacon: Dip the bacon in cream and then roll in flour. Place on smokeless broiler pan of the new automatic electric range and place broiler pan in second notch from the top of oven. Turn switch to Broil. Turn Temperature Control as far as it can be turned. Leave oven door slightly ajar. Broil, turning once, until bacon is crisp and brown. The "Miracle" broiler broils the bacon to a crisp uniform brownness. Smoking and burning is eliminated due to the unique construction of the broiler pan.

Facts vs. Epigrams

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman

Sentinels of the Republic

"The greatest truths are the simplest." During the past few years the American people have witnessed the injection of many new and complex ideas into their once direct and simple form of government.

And they have been further puzzled by long explanations of those novelties, often in terms still more complex and unfamiliar.

The process continues — quickened during recent weeks by the demands of campaign oratory. Yet even when enlivened by epigram and wisecrack, many of those explanations sound strange and foreign to the American ear.

But there is no reason for such complexity. Facts are simple things, and in campaigns as in routine reports of government, may be simply told. The fundamental issues which interest the American people need neither epigram nor wisecrack to clarify them.

The strength, the value and the security of our Constitution, for example, can be described in the simplest terms. Reasons for discarding its basic principles need more involved explanation.

The sanctity of personal liberty — of the right of every citizen to run his own farm, his own business, his own affairs — is another truth that can be simply stated. Reasons for curbing that freedom are harder to present.

The need to eliminate extravagance in government and its consequent drain on the earnings and resources of every citizen, may be readily outlined and understood. Reasons for continuing such waste require longer, more difficult and more complicated phrases.

If campaign orators will remember these things their labors will be both easier and more effective. The American people are eager today for facts, not epigrams.

They realize that the greatest truths are not only the simplest; they are also the most easily told.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMPANY OF NORTHERN ILLINOIS

Propose I. & M. Canal Highway For Only 8 Miles

The Chicago Regional Planning Association has issued a statement correcting reports that it recommended that the State build a motor highway 96 miles long, from Chicago to LaSalle, on the old Illinois and Michigan Canal right-of-way which is 240 feet wide.

Only an 8 mile section, from 31st street in Chicago southwesterly to Summit, is proposed. Later on this might be extended 4 miles farther, to the 79th street viaduct over the DesPlaines river valley, to make it serve as a city connection for a proposed 200 foot parkway beginning at Aurora.

From 79th street southwesterly to LaSalle, the association doubts that future conditions will justify the canal's conversion into an automobile highway. The varied landscape of dense trees, shrubs and rare species of flowers found along almost the entire distance from Summit to LaSalle, makes it highly desirable to conserve and develop that portion of the canal for park and recreational purposes.

The Regional Plan envisions this part improved as a picturesque canoe route, for boy scouts and others, with hiking trails along the banks, and a chain of picnic grounds serving the towns and farmers along the entire route. Automobiles would have access to these picnic grounds over one-lane gravel or cinder roads along the old tow path where mules once pulled the old-time barges. Each area would be improved with a parking space, a well, sanitation facilities and fire place shelters.

Civilian Conservation Corps camps under the National Park Service, have already made substantial progress in carrying out this part of the association's plan to bring back the obsolete and abandoned canal to public use. Picnic areas have been developed and are usable at Willow Springs, Lemont, Romeo, Lockport, Channahon, Aux Sable Locks, Morris and near Buffalo Rock.

The old canal right-of-way lying within the City of Chicago and as far out as Summit is almost bare of any trees or shrubs. It is on this section that a high-speed, parkway-type of highway is proposed.

The 240-foot width offers oppor-

entrance to the central area of the city from the southwest. Besides serving as a pleasant route to travel over, the design proposed would provide the utmost in safety, separate pavements for each direction and grade separations with all railroads and major cross streets. Access from minor streets would not be permitted, according to the plan.

An I. and M. Canal highway in combination with Cicero avenue, Archer avenue, State street or other thoroughfares, which the City of Chicago could improve with its share of the gas tax, would serve as an improved motor route to the Municipal airport at 63rd street and Cicero avenue.

It would also serve as a city connection for such existing heavily traveled country roads as Ogden avenue, Joliet road, Archer avenue and Harlem avenue.

ORLAND PARK

Interest in the Southwest Highway project in which Orland residents were vitally interested a few years ago, is being revived again.

A week ago, Dr. W. R. Schussler and a group of Southwest Highway Boosters from Manhattan, Orland and a number of down-state towns met in conference with C. Wayland Brooks, Republican candidate for Governor and laid the matter before the latter. Mr. Brooks said he favored the completion of the Southwest Highway gap of 55 miles from Saunemin to Marley by the state and pledged that if he is elected he will see that this highway is completed.

As a result of this conference a number of big meetings are being arranged for down state and many of the down-staters who voted the Democratic ticket a few years back are flocking to the Republican fold and have declared they will support and vote for Brooks with the hope of seeing the Southwest Highway gap finished.

The Southwest Highway boosters declare the Democrats have refused to consider the project at all. In the first place Robert Kingery, who held an important post in the highway department from which he resigned recently, has been dead set against the Southwest Highway project and Governor Horner has paid no attention to efforts made to interest him in the matter. As a result of this situation the highway proposition has been made a political issue and a drive is on to wear the Democrats to the Republican fold in order to get this much-needed highway completed.

A huge mass meeting of both a political and road-boasting complexion will be held at Decatur on Sept. 29. The Southwest Highway project will be one of the issues to be discussed.

Wm. Reimers

Has Big Surprise

What a birthday party. What a jolly time and what a big surprise it was to Will Reimers of Frankfort for no one had even mentioned birthday and he himself had even forgotten all about it when 14 cars drove into the yard with congratulations and happy returns of the day.

The following families helped him celebrate: Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Perry and family, Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. H. Reimers and family, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Stuckey and family; Mr. and Mrs. Jack DePorto and family, all of Frankfort; Mr. and Mrs. Henry Schwieso, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Stender and family of Monee; Mr. and Mrs. Roy Stoll and family, Mr. and Mrs. A. Swingendorf and son of Matteson; Mr. and Mrs. Albert Bruns and daughters Beatrice and Helen, Homer, Walsh of Chicago Heights; Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Lehnert and son, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Lehnert and son and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Eggerts of Mokena; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bohnsack, Mrs. Harvey Bohnsack of New Lenox; Mrs. Fred Reimers, Miss Alma Saenholz of Homewood.

The afternoon was pleasantly spent in a social way, a ball game and various other games, after which a delicious cafeteria supper was served.

Ruth Reimers then recited to her father the following very befitting little poem in honor of the happy occasion:

We know you hate a lot of fuss
But this time Dad you can't dodge us,
Because we've simply gotta say,
How much we think of you today,
Happy Birthday.

As the guests departed for their homes they wished Mr. Reimers many more such happy birthdays.

'Social Defense' in Russia

Washington. — The Associated Press carried a dispatch from Moscow a few days ago that had more in it than just the announcement that certain oppositionists among the Soviet leaders were to be executed. The dispatch reported that 16 confessed conspirators against the Soviet state were sentenced to death by the firing squad as the "highest measure of social defense" of a government.

It reported a new stage in the so-called progress of Communism in the Russian state. For the first time since the Bolsheviks came into power they ordered the death penalty for some of the leaders who marched in the Revolution of October, 1917.

So we have a clean sweep now of the men who sat next to the dictator, Lenin; the men who were his closest advisors in council are out of the way, and in their place remains the extensively practical and strong-willed executive, Stalin, who has in this instance declined to allow theory to interfere with a condition.

Here is the picture. Leon Trotsky in exile and under sentence of death if he returns into Russia. Zinoviev shot to death. Kamenev also executed by a firing squad (he will be remembered as an outstanding pillar of Bolshevism). Tomsy, a suicide. Rykov, Bukharin and Rodek under investigation by the dreadful OGPU. A hated secret service is looking into the records of Sokolnikov and Pyotakov. The latter two have been important advisors to Stalin. But what is all of this about? The answer is simple. While these men were charged with plotting the murder of Stalin, with conspiracy, beneath it all lies the thirst of men for power. Through all of this since the fall of the Russian empire and the execution of Czar Nicholas, the Communists have pushed forward. The strongest of them have traveled. That is the why of Stalin. Yet as most always happens under any circumstance where the will of a few men runs free, they have inflicted to the last degree the power that they have gathered unto themselves. In so doing they have not failed to reserve unto themselves such considerations as they thought necessary—a perfectly human trait of character answerable only where a whim becomes a will and there is power to carry it out.

Between Stalin, who was able to enforce his will, and Trotsky, who dwelt in the starchy heavens of theories and dreams, there is only a theoretical difference. Each wanted Communism. Trotsky considered the problem in the terms of world revolution; Stalin thought of it as the Russian state and recognized his capacity to carry his plans through in that jurisdiction. So the Stalin-Trotsky feud, as it has turned out to be, has become ferocious and any one who has gone contrary—even entertained thoughts contrary to the will of the mighty Stalin—committed a sin against the state. And a sin against the Russian state under Stalin means to disappear.

Lesson for Americans

It seems to me there is an important lesson for the American people in that situation. Stalin, along with Hitler and Mussolini, is always right. It matters not what the people may desire, what their philosophy of life and living may be, how they propose to encourage or accept responsibility for self-government, the dictatorship continues.

Many times in these columns I have criticized bureaucracy in the federal government. There are so many bureaucrats in Washington now that some one has bitterly described them as locusts. It may seem quite a jump from bureaucracy to dictatorship but the difference actually is very small. When the people of the United States concede to the federal government such rights as the federal government attempted to exercise in NRA and even to a greater extent in the AAA, they are taking the first step to grant to a centralized government the authority that leads to absolute control of the person and everything that person does.

There are conditions undoubtedly that need to be remedied before our form of government is anything like perfect. There is always to be considered changing conditions and the changing whims of people themselves. But I entertain the conviction that so long as the American people are unwilling to accord increasing powers to the federal government, the nation as a whole will go forward, civilization will progress and we will enjoy having a government.

The transfer of William C. Bullitt from his recent post as ambassador to Russia to a similar assignment in France upon the resignation of Ambassador Straus has occasioned but very little comment, but it seems to me in view of all conditions and circumstances that it should attract attention. He will take up the job as the chief American diplomat at Paris in most troublesome times, the most difficult, perhaps, that have confronted an American diplomat anywhere since the days of 1914 to 1916. Appointment of Mr. Bullitt then, it would appear, is a move that calls into consideration not only the conditions which he will meet as our ambassador but also his qualifications for the job.

It is to be remembered, first, that the post of ambassador to Paris is the second highest in rank among our foreign diplomats. It is a post that always has called for about the best that our nation can turn out in the way of tactful representation even though we always count the assignment to London as the No. 1 ranking post. The reason is that we seldom, if ever, have had the problems to deal with in the case of the London government that continuously arise between the United States and France. We always have been friendly with France in modern times, but it can not be denied that there has been constant friction between the two peoples. The same has not been true concerning Anglo-American relations. Hence, the job at Paris has always been regarded as more difficult than that at London.

As for Mr. Bullitt's capacity, there is a general feeling that he is not an outstanding diplomat. He has achieved success in some lines, yet I believe the consensus is that in so far as his recent service at Moscow is concerned, the Russians can claim much greater success in dealing with the United States than we can in dealing with the Soviet.

Those of us who were present as observers in Washington during the days when Foreign Commissar Litvinov met with President Roosevelt in the series of conferences that resulted in recognition of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics can not fail to recall how Mr. Bullitt labored to accomplish that recognition. It will be recalled as well that Mr. Bullitt insisted throughout these negotiations how trade would follow recognition. He urged that the 13-year old policy of non-recognition, held by Wilson, Harding, Coolidge and Hoover, should be cast aside in the interest of trade, predicting a great flow of commerce between the nations. President Roosevelt eventually made that the real basis for granting recognition.

None of the predicted trade has come about. None will be possible until the Soviet finds means of paying for American goods. American business men are a bit old fashioned. They want to be paid for what they sell.

After what some critics have called Mr. Bullitt's "dismal failure" at Moscow, he is promoted to the French post. The selection comes at a time when French internal politics are boiling. It comes likewise at a time when the Washington government is striving to expand American exports and when it is hoped that there will not be a further decline in outbound shipments such as official figures of the Department of Commerce show has taken place in trade with Russia.

Senator James Couzens of Michigan who is up for re-election this fall has sort of upset the apple cart for the Republicans, although they profess not to be particularly worried. The senior senator from Michigan has always served in the senate as a Republican but now he makes the announcement that he is going to support President Roosevelt for re-election and that brings the senator's regularity as a Republican into question.

Senator Couzens has been a powerful man politically in Michigan in years past. He has served his city, Detroit, and his state and the nation in a distinguished way. Obviously, such service builds up an important political following but, according to superficial indication, no one knows exactly how much remains of that following. This statement assumes that the senator's strength is not as great as it used to be and all current information supports that view. Yet, in politics, nothing is certain and that is the reason why Senator Couzens's action has proved disturbing.

Former Gov. Wilbur M. Brucker is seeking the Republican nomination for the senate in Michigan and thus the incumbent has his difficulties in getting the nomination because the Democrats will have a candidate of their own. Be it said in favor of Senator Couzens, however, he was fair with the voters of his party by announcing before the primaries what his attitude would be respecting the presidential candidates and his sincerity in this regard may have some effect. On the other hand, it is difficult to say how dyed-in-the-wool Republicans can remain with Senator Couzens after an announcement by which he virtually has read himself out of the party.

Mrs. Angeline Modaff, a life long resident of Aurora, died there at the age of seventy-seven in her home. She was the widow of William Modaff, an Aurora dairyman for many years. Six sons and two daughters survive her.

C. P. Lawson, eighty-three, who was assessor of Western township in Henry county forty-three years, died in Orion. He also had been constable and road commissioner, and was first postmaster of Crampton station.

A dollar bill "conscience money" from an Indiana couple who slipped into the state fair early one morning five years ago when there was no gateman on duty was received by Eugene E. Irwin, general manager of the fair.

H. Ransom Hurley, seventy-six years old, former president of the Mahomet Grain company and also connected with the Mahomet State bank, died, and was buried in Maple Grove cemetery, near Farmer City. He had been serving as township assessor.

A new use for commonplace Illinois farm products was discovered by Maj. M. L. Bromberg, head of National Youth Administration handicraft projects for this state. Impressed by the beauty of the decorations in the farm products booths at the State fair, Major Bromberg announced that he will include in his work the use of black-eyed cow peas, white soy beans, dried corn tassels and Sudan grass for decorative purposes.

Governor Horner officially accepted the statue, "Lincoln, The Story Teller," which was carved before the interested gaze of hundreds of state fair visitors to the art project exhibit in the federal group. The statue will be placed in the State Historical library. Isaac Diller, eighty-four, Springfield resident, one of the few living persons who are known to have known Lincoln, posed for artist Carl Hallsthammar who did the carving. Diller's likeness is part of the group which represents Lincoln telling stories around the cracker barrel in a country store.

Attorney General Otto Kerner of Illinois made public an opinion in which he held that the state relief tax law is valid and that tax anticipation warrants issued under it are legal. The law provides for a tax of 30 cents on each $100 of property valuation. Under the law, the tax is imposed twice in a number of townships partly within and partly without the city limits of Chicago, once by the city and once by the locally elected township assessor. Because of the double taxation feature the law firm of Chapman and Cutler has advised bankers that it considers the law illegal and the warrants consequently questionable.

Howard Collier of Canton was crowned the champion of Illinois horseshoe pitchers at the completion of a strenuous two-day tournament at the Illinois state fair. Collier, who won twenty out of twenty-three games, received a gold watch, the award of the state association from L. E. Tanner, president, under whom Collier has played in tournaments at the state fair for the past eight years. In that time he has placed second in the tournament three times. He also received the first prize of fifty dollars from the fair association. Ellis Griggs, Plainville, the defending champion, placed second with a total of nineteen wins.

The only gift in the world that is made exclusively to royalty is the "Golden Rose," which is presented by the Pope to a sovereign or a member of a reigning family who merits it through pious deeds. Lesson for September 13

THE COUNCIL IN JERUSALEM

LESSON TEXT—Acts 15:22-29; Galatians 2:1, 2, 9, 10.
GOLDEN TEXT—For ye, brethren, were called for freedom; only use not your freedom for an occasion to the flesh, but through love be servants one to another.

PRIMARY TOPIC—How to Settle a Quarrel.
JUNIOR TOPIC—How to Settle a Dispute.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Is Christian Living?
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How to Live as a Christian.

Although the first council at Jerusalem (Acts 11) had decided that "to the Gentiles also hath God granted repentance unto life, the question did not stay settled, for there were persistent Judaizing teachers who now contended that even though the Gentiles could be saved, they had to come into the church by way of Judaism and fulfill the Jewish rite of circumcision. This raised the vital and fundamental question of

I. Grace versus Law (Acts 15:1). The entire future of the gospel ministry was in a sense dependent on the solution of this problem. Christianity is the only religious faith in the world that presents justification by grace, all others follow the path of works. The question now was, shall works of the law be mingled with grace—can Jesus Christ alone save men, or is salvation through Jesus Christ, plus something else. How was such a serious question to be settled? Should argument and strife be permitted to go on until the stronger party prevailed? Better judgment indicated the desirability of

II. Council Rather Than Controversy (vv. 2-21).

There may be times when it becomes the duty of the Christian worker to take an uncompromising stand for the truth of God and refuse to be moved, come what may. But certainly there should be no such spirit in dealing with differing interpretations of Scripture on the part of sincere and earnest Christian brethren.

The question was honestly and carefully considered by the second council at Jerusalem, with the result that there was a

III. Vindication of the Preachers of God's Grace (Acts 15:22-29; Gal. 2:1, 2, 9, 10).

After presenting a plain disavowal of those who had troubled them and subverted their souls (what a serious thing it is to teach error concerning God's Word!), the council being of one accord gave recognition to Paul and Barnabas as men who had "hazarded their lives for the name of the Lord Jesus."

No man should think more highly of himself than he ought. Humility is a Christian grace which well befits a sinner saved by grace. But the Bible abounds with admonitions to honor one another, to recognize the laborer as being worthy of his hire, to give recognition to those who are over us in the Lord. How long is it since you or your church comforted and encouraged some faithful teacher, preacher, missionary, or other Christian worker, by giving such recognition as the council at Jerusalem gave to Paul and Barnabas?

The final decision of the council is sent not only by Paul and Barnabas, but also by a committee from Jerusalem, a gracious gesture of fellowship. Courtesy is not out of place in dealing with even such difficult things as controversies on Christian doctrine—in fact it should be most in place in such a situation. But as a matter of record they also sent

IV. A Letter Which Brought Great Joy (Acts 15:23, 31).

After addressing the Gentiles as "brethren," this letter, which has been well called "the Magna Charta of Christian liberty," reviewed briefly the history of the matter, disposed of the subverters, commended Paul and Barnabas and then without mentioning circumcision at all puts upon the Gentiles "no greater burden than the necessary things." And what were these? Purity of life, as those who were enjoying Christian liberty. The law of Moses need not be kept as a ground of salvation. They were saved by grace. "But grace can never be the cloak of careless living, nor can liberty in Christ be interpreted as license to live in sin. We are set free in Christ, not that we may sin, but that we may 'go and sin no more.'"

Following an Ideal

Blessed is he who carries within himself a God, an ideal, and who obeys it; ideal of art, ideal of science, ideal of the gospel virtues; therein lie the springs of great thoughts and great actions; they all reflect light from the Infinite.—Pasteur.

Our Own Pleasures

It is only a poor sort of happiness that could ever come by caring very much about our own narrow pleasures.—George Eliot.

Drouth-Stricken Farmers Get Government Aid

Their crops seared and withered and their farms reduced to dusty stretches of sun-baked soil, these North Dakota farmers are forced to turn to work projects as their only means of avoiding starvation for themselves and families. They are being put to work on water conservation and irrigation projects to reclaim their once fertile land from the grip of drouth and barrenness.

FARMER BROWN'S BOY LOSES HIS TEMPER

IT WAS a long time since Farmer Brown's Boy had visited the Laughing Brook and the Smiling Pool, so of course he knew nothing about what had been going on there. One morning, having nothing else to do, he took it into his head to go over to the Smiling Pool to see how Jerry Muskrat was getting along. Jerry saw him coming and his heart was so filled with distrust because of what he had suffered from the trapper who had so nearly caught him that he actually suspected Farmer Brown's Boy.

"I Guess You Are Pretty Nearly Ready for Cold Weather," Said He.

"I used to think that I could trust Farmer Brown's Boy," muttered Jerry, "but I don't trust him. I don't trust anybody. As likely as not Farmer Brown's Boy has been friendly just so that he can take advantage of it." So Jerry promptly hid where Farmer Brown's Boy could not see him, but where he could watch Farmer Brown's Boy.

The latter was whistling, a habit he has when he is feeling happy. He came straight down to the bank of the Smiling Pool and there he stood for a few minutes looking at Jerry's house. "I guess you are pretty nearly ready for cold weather," said he, just as if he were talking to Jerry. "I've brought a couple of carrots for you and I hope you will enjoy them. You'll find them over by that favorite old log of yours." Farmer Brown's Boy pulled a couple of carrots from his pocket and walked over to the old log which lay half in the water and half out. It was the very log where Jerry had been caught in the trap by his tail. When Farmer Brown's Boy got there he gave a little whistle of surprise. There were some pieces of carrot already there. Then Farmer Brown's Boy's face clouded. "I wonder what this means," said he, and at once began to look about. It didn't take him long to discover the trap fastened to the old log. "Ha! I thought so!" exclaimed Farmer Brown's Boy, and his face became angry looking.

He reached down and got hold of the chain of the trap and pulled it free from the log. Then he tossed it up on the bank and at once went over to another favorite feeding place of Jerry's. There, just as he expected, he found another trap. This he also threw up on the bank, and his face looked angrier than ever.

Now Farmer Brown's Boy knew all about trapping, and, what is more, he knew all about the ways of Jerry Muskrat. So he went from place to place where he thought traps might be set. He found two more, and by this time he had quite lost his temper.

"I'd like to know who it is has dared to set traps here," he grumbled. "This is on our land, and everybody knows that we don't allow trapping. I guess I'll have to go up the Laughing Brook and see if there are more traps up there. I'll take these traps along with me, and whoever owns them will have to come up to the house to get them. Then I'll give him such a good piece of my mind that he won't do any more trapping along the Laughing Brook and around the Smiling Pool."

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

GOOD AND ECONOMICAL

A BEEF loaf is an economical main dish to serve occasionally, and it may be as tasty as it is satisfying. It is without waste, and when sliced may be served as cold meat for the second day. The following is slightly different, but recommended as very good:

Beef Loaf.

Simmer one and one-half pounds of round of beef in a quart of boiling water, teaspoonful of salt and a tablespoonful of vinegar. When tender chop very fine. Add to the broth, which should be at least a cupful, a teaspoonful of sugar, the same of sage and thyme. Add one tablespoonful of Worcestershire sauce and more salt and pepper. Mix with the meat and press in a buttered mold. Serve when well chilled with sliced tomato on lettuce with mayonnaise.

Stuffed Flank Steak.

Have a flank steak trimmed and scored. Mix one cupful of bread crumbs, one small onion chopped, one-half of a grated carrot, one-half cupful of chopped celery, one tablespoonful of minced parsley, one teaspoonful of sugar and salt and pepper to taste. Add one-third cupful of hot water or vegetable liquor to moisten. Spread this mixture over the steak, roll up tightly and tie firmly. Sprinkle with seasoned flour and brown in a little hot fat. Place in a covered baking pan and bake one and one-half hours, basting with butter and ve-table liquor three or four times during the baking. Serve with pan gravy.

Macedoine Salad.

Take two cupfuls of cooked rice, one cupful of peas, three tablespoonfuls each of minced celery and grated cheese, four tablespoonfuls each of pimiento and relish, one teaspoonful of salt. Mix well and serve on lettuce with french or mayonnaise dressing.

When fresh coconuts are in the market, keep some freshly grated coconut well sugared in the ice chest. Use it on salads, on custards as topping for cream pie and custard pie and as cake filling. It is so much tastier than the canned or package variety, which we welcome when the fresh nut is out of the market.

THE DAILY ROUND

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WHO treads a daily round may deem
The daily round a grind,
For so the task will always seem,
The task however kind,
Until it is a faded dream
Of something left behind.

This morning we our way shall wend
To some familiar door,
Shall walk a street, and meet a friend,
And find a place of yore:
But some day all of that shall end,
And end forevermore.

Yet I have known of mortals who
Had found, yet never found,
The ease they dreamed, as I and you
Dream now of limbs unbound—
Who longed for something they could do,
Again the daily round.

You will choose four

MYSTERIOUS PREDICTION

ON a sheet of paper you write the words: "You will choose four." Place the paper on the table, folded so that no one can see what you have written.

Next lay four stacks of cards in a row. Ask a person to choose any stack. When he has done so, have him open the paper; then you prove that the stack he chose was "four."

Any heap may be chosen. If the person takes the stack at your right, you count the stacks yourself: "one, two, three, four—" ending on his heap. If he takes the stack at your left, you ask him to count the piles himself. He counts from his left; and his chosen stack is number four.

One of the middle stacks has four cards; if the person chose it, tell him to count the cards and he finds that he has four. The other middle stack has only one card; that card, however, is a four spot, face down. If it is chosen, have the person turn up the card and he sees the four.

Uncle Sam Gets More Territory

"No Man's Land," an area 30 by 70 miles, located in the Colorado Rockies, was found to have been omitted from all United States treaties covering the acquisition of territory and therefore was formally claimed and annexed at a ceremony which took place at Breckenridge, Colo. After Gov. Ed C. Johnson had formally claimed the land for the United States, National Guardsmen unfurled the American flag, as seen in the illustration.

"The Man Who-o-o"

Tales and Traditions from American Political History

BY FRANK E. HAGEN AND ELMO SCOTT WATSON

BY ELMO VOTE

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES of Ohio, nineteenth President of the United States, can be designated "the man who was elected by a single vote."

His contest with Samuel J. Tilden of New York, the Democratic nominee, threatened for a time in 1876 and early 1877 to bring about a resumption of the Civil war. Perhaps it explains in some measure the bitterness of battles today between Republicans and Democrats.

Hayes faced the disadvantage of running in the wake of the eight years of the Grant administrations, followed as they were by sensational accusations of financial frauds. There was little to choose between abilities of the candidates and when first returns were in, Tilden was acclaimed as winner.

Shortly after election day, it was revealed that Tilden's managers were uncertain as to the results their party had achieved in Florida, South Carolina and Louisiana. Normally Democratic, these states still were in the hands of carpet-bagger governments.

Tilden had 184 electoral votes and the ballots of any of the three states named would have elected him. Hayes, with 166, needed all of them to have one electoral vote more than Tilden. In Louisiana, the canvassing board threw out 13,250 Democratic votes and gave the state to Hayes. Republicans asserted their candidate had won in both South Carolina and Florida. But Democrats of the three states returned votes for Tilden.

To make the situation a typical American scene, congress was divided, one branch being Democratic, the other Republican.

It was decided finally to appoint five congressmen from each party and five judges of the Supreme court to make the decision as to which set of returns from the disputed states should be accepted.

The election of Hayes was assured by the vote of Justice Bradley, whose participation gave the deliberative body a margin of eight Republicans to seven Democrats. And congress approved these momentous findings just in time to enable Rutherford B. Hayes to take the oath of office as President.

NAMING A PARTY

IRONICALLY enough, the names of the two principal political parties once were combined as Democratic Republicans, a group of which the standard bearer was Thomas Jefferson, referred to perhaps oftener than any other leader when Democrats trace their political origin.

Under Jackson the party name was shortened to Democrat, which it continues to bear.

Republicans emerged as a separate party as early as 1854, although its first nominating convention was held two years later. Up at Ripon, Wis., in a corner of the campus of Ripon college, stands the Ripon Congregational church, scene of the first G. O. P. meeting.

The Ripon meeting had been called by Major Alvan E. Bovay, a Whig lawyer, who generally receives credit for suggesting the name of the party.

He had passed on his idea to Horace Greeley who later advocated the name Republican at a convention in Jackson, Mich.

Although Ripon had a voting list that hardly exceeded 100 in those days of exclusively male suffrage, more than half of them attended Bovay's first gathering. The impulse which brought them together was the conviction that the slavery question was coming rapidly to a head and that those who opposed must unite in a new group, regardless of geographical lines.

Northern states naturally proved the most fertile ground for spreading the new doctrine. Before the party's first national convention, which was held in Philadelphia on June 17, 1856—a firm "toehold" had been secured by senatorial representation at Washington.

History fails to record what part, if any, Major Bovay played in the Philadelphia meeting. The delegates were unanimously in favor of nominating John C. Fremont and he was selected on the first ballot.

Another Republican attended, however. He was the galling Illinois rail-splitter, Abe Lincoln, and some of his colleagues had the temerity to advance his name as a candidate for vice-president. "Honest Abe" lost the nomination but four years later he was to carry the party to victory.

Rivers That Flow North

The St. Johns River in Florida is supposedly the only river in the United States which flows northward throughout its entire course. There are others, however, which flow north for a part of their course. These include the Monongahela in Pennsylvania, the Tennessee in Tennessee and Kentucky, the Red River of the North in Minnesota and North Dakota, Big Horn in Wyoming and Montana, Powder in Wyoming and Montana.

"Better Be Safe Than Sorry"

Mrs. Helen Sandidge who has been in the hospital returned home the fore part of the week and resumed her duties as teacher in the Tinley Park School Tuesday.

The Ladies' Aid of the English M. E. Church of Tinley Park held a fare-well luncheon Wednesday afternoon in the church parlors in honor of Mrs. Henry Wyman who expects to leave soon for Texas, and Mrs. Yuska who is moving back to Chicago.

A table was decorated with several bowls of beautiful flowers and groaned under a load of good eats. Mrs. Norman Hardinger president of the Ladies Aid read appropriate remarks, and presented both honored guests with a shower of beautiful handkerchiefs as gifts of friendship and fellowship from those present.

Mrs. John E. Swisher gave a fitting tribute by way of comparing the beautiful flowers and gardens to their place in the world and as symbols of friendship and fellowship. Mrs. Wyman and Mrs. Yuska very graciously thanked the ladies for the fine tribute of friendship. At the close of the luncheon the entire group sang the Doxology and "Blessed Be the Tie That Binds." About 20 guests were present.

A large number of Tinley Park people attended the address given by Father Coughlin in Riverview Park Sunday.

Prof. and Mrs. Earl Swisher of Boulder, Colo., were visitors at the home of the former's brother John E. Swisher in Tinley Park.

The Tinley Park school opened Tuesday with an enrollment of over 200.

Wm. Funk and Wm. Koehler expect to leave this week on a fishing trip on the Tippacanoe river in Indiana.

HOW OLD IS YOUR FURNACE?

THERE IS NO OTHER PIECE of Operating Equipment in your home or your business that gives you as many hours of service for so little cost of upkeep as your furnace.

Do you realize that your furnace operates continually day and night for seven to eight months each year—that it is a machine that needs attention and care just the same as any piece of mechanical equipment. Have you noticed excessive dust and dirt through the registers, or even in extreme cases the spreading of deadly carbon monoxide gas throughout the home?

No piece of machinery can be kept in constant use without an occasional overhauling. Neither can a furnace operate successfully over a long period of years unless it is completely taken down and re-cemented at least once every six or eight years.

To insure clean fresh air in your home and keep your fuel bill at a minimum we will give you a complete reset job for the special price of $11.00 if contract is let within the next two weeks of this issue.

THIS SERVICE INCLUDES THE FOLLOWING WORK:

We take off casing and completely dismantle furnace. Chip and brush out all old cement. Scrape and clean all casing joints with Rutland cement. Restrip all casing joints with heavy asbestos paper.

Clean smoke pipe and base of chimney. Re-cement smoke pipe in chimney. Clean warm air and cold air pipes. Re-paint front of furnace. Adjust regulator chains. Sweep-up and remove all dirt around furnace. FOR MORE DETAILS—PHONE, WRITE OR CALL
